The Capitol Removal.

The heavy hauling on trucks over the stone steps at the north front of the State House has sunk the stones badly. A spectator remarked vesterday that it would take the $10.000 appropriated by the State to repair the building to make good the damage done in moving out. Some inquiry is heard as to where that $10.000 is to come from, since the Treasury is empty.

The men employed at the Capitol in nailing up the packing cases used in transporting the books, papers, etc., used steel nails, and they all aver that with the least shaking about of the boxes the nails jar loose. For some reason the lids of the boxes do come off, as any one can see who visits the Capitol nowadays.

About the room set two or three men and old women. The rear door was open and through it could be seen the lights of a busy city and the murky waters of the creek below. Dampness was overywhere, and the slant of the house was so perceptible that one felt all the time as though about to be plunged into the water underneath. As the little umbrolla mender stood there over the dead woman, and in talking gesticulated with his light that threw strange shadows, the scene was, a decidedly repulsive one. Godfrey's story is that Hannah went out after a bucket of coal, and on her return sat down on the floor, said she felt unwell, and fell over; that her face turned a sickly yellow color, and that he hurried out for assistance, and on his return with a neighbor's boy, found the woman's dead.

A NEW PUMP

In Wheeling but Thoroughly Tested an Universally Adopted Elsewhere. Mr. Brooks E. Adams has one of the while passing sions startet street yester-day afternoon an INTELLIGENCER reporter noticed the pump at work, and stepping in was told by Mr. Addans that it was the first pump of the kind ever in this city. A few inquiries concerning the pump and the uses to which it could be applied elicited the information that it was now almost universally used in pumping water to portions of buildings where the pressure on the mains were not sufficient to raise it. And in the country it was used for the purpose of raising the water from wells or eisterns, and distributing it to all portions of the buildings on the farm, so that a farmer may have the same water privileges on the farm that the most favorably located clizen of this city may have. "The beauty of the pump is," said Mr. Adams, "is its simplicity. No boiler, no steam, no exhaust, valveless engine, noiseless, no more care than an ordinary cookings stove, does not affect insurance, any servant girl can operate it, absolutely safe, no engineer required, with these advantages it leads all pumps in the market. He said he thought it would fill a long felt want in this community. The pump will be kept running during the day and evening, when all interested or who delight in viewing a nice piece of mechanism can stopin at No. 1510 Market street.
